Commentary

The EHP Guardian Fund Class "F" units declined -0.1% for the month of March, versus a loss of -0.2% for the TSX Composite and a loss of -2.5% for the S&P 500. Our equity strategies were down slightly as our portfolio continued to adjust to the broadening correction, and we ended the month "risk off" in the U.S. market after a volatile month. All equity markets we trade globally are now "risk off" and most are in correction territory, down 10% or more from their highs. Our Credit Momentum strategy posted gains as we rotated from cash to a long position in 30-year U.S. treasuries. Long-dated U.S. treasuries, which traditionally acts as a flight-to-safety asset, are finally responding to equity market stress as we expected they would, despite the strong narrative that interest rates can only move higher in the medium term. Indeed, short-term rates are likely to move higher as the Fed continues hiking, while a flattening of the yield curve in classic late-cycle fashion can have investors discounting the next recession, causing 30-year rates to move lower at the same time.

March was a challenging month for equity investors as not only did global markets trade down, but they did so in whipsaw fashion, with massive swings taking place and with leadership shifting across investment styles and between sectors. A whole new series of concerns emerged in March, taking markets lower from a mid-month bounce, with the current fears being protectionist rhetoric from Washington and the potential for ensuing trade wars. Tech stocks were also topical, with data-privacy questions, monopoly concerns and fear of regulatory scrutiny all suddenly headwinds for the sector. We have written extensively about the dangers of high-priced growth stocks in late cycle environments, and while the market-leading FAANG stocks hit all-time highs after the February sell-off, the last few weeks in March saw the first meaningful signs of cracks in the crowded bet. While likely too early to call an end to the "growth at any price" trade that has dominated market leadership for the majority of the last fifteen months, we are encouraged to see the early signs of a return to an environment where valuations may actually matter.

Fund flows are also becoming a troubling narrative, with some of the largest equity inflows on record coinciding with the market top in January, followed by the largest weekly outflows in history during the February sell-off, followed by huge inflows in March as investors bought the rally, only to have markets once again punish those same buyers on the renewed market sell-off. Is passive investing becoming active panic? This behavior can make it more difficult to find a market bottom as the twin mantras of "FOMO" (fear of missing out), and "buy the dips" dissipates and trapped short-term buyers look to sell rallies. In another sign of a worsening correction, for the first time in many months, low volatility strategies outperformed all others as investors rotated toward defensive bond proxy sectors and away from high-beta stocks.

We enter April with risk in the fund now fully geared down. With U.S. markets capitulating in March and joining their global counterparts, the final shoe dropped in our de-risking process, leaving us with exposures and betas for each of our funds at the lower end of their targeted ranges. As a reminder, our gearing process is designed to allow us to participate in bull markets, but more importantly to protect investors during extended drawdowns. Whether this is one of those periods, only time will tell, but we will stick to our discipline which currently has us conservatively positioned and will remain so until those conditions change.
