Commentary

The EHP Advantage International Fund Class "F" units declined -3.1% for the month of October. Gains on shorts were offset by losses on longs as every market in which we invest was down anywhere from 6-8% on the month. Momentum and growth styles were hammered, while higher-quality, low volatility, dividend-paying stocks outperformed meaningfully. While the fund benefited from this style rotation, it was a market with no place to hide as both stocks and bonds sold off together. We exited our high yield position early in the month with small losses, and currently have no allocation to with the defensive 30-year bond also in a downtrend.

October lived up to its reputation for being volatile with global stock markets experiencing their worst month in years, with most indices hitting "correction" territory before partially rebounding into month end. It appears that concerns surrounding trade tensions, fears of slowing global growth and higher rates moved to the forefront of concerns, causing sentiment to turn on a market that by all measures was overbought, excessively bullish, and complacent. Unlike February, this selloff was marked by a breakdown in recent leadership and an unwinding of what had been the most popular trades since the beginning of 2017. Momentum and expensive growth stocks were hit the hardest as investors booked profits and abandoned recent winners, de-risked portfolios, and rotated into the safer havens; utilities, REIT's, telecoms and staples.

The pullback has been substantial, rapid and global in nature, with few places to hide. We have been arguing for an end to the "growth at any price" trade, best characterized by the parabolic moves in "FAANG" stocks in the U.S and cannabis stocks in Canada. As much as we disdain bear markets, our funds tend to do best when a market dominated by growth stocks finally cracks and investors redeploy capital into long ignored higher quality, cheaper stocks. Despite the selloff in growth stocks over the past few months, valuations are still lofty, and this rotation will have many months to go before the froth is removed. It by no means implies that the market needs to continue to sell off - we would not be surprised for indices to stabilize and move higher, but we would expect to see a shift in leadership. With a backdrop of strong earnings, reasonable economic growth and accommodative central banks, it is easy to envision financials, industrials and cyclical leading the market higher.

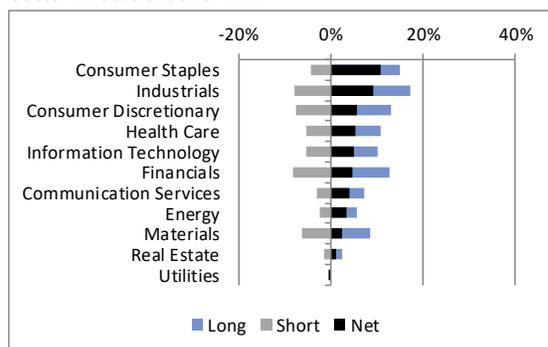

Whether this market goes lower from here, or if the bulk of losses are behind us, we remain uncertain of what will dictate the next move either way, and as such we remain committed as always to our process. We don't attempt to call market tops or bottoms, rather relying on our risk-gearing process that utilizes a number of tactical indicators to dictate overall exposures. The goal with all our funds is to have a predetermined, unemotional, and disciplined process that allows us to participate in rising markets while taking our chips off the table during downtrends, protecting capital and avoiding substantial drawdowns.
