Commentary

The EHP Select Fund Class “F” units declined -4.4% for the month of December. Despite offering some protection, gains from our shorts were overwhelmed by losses from longs. 2018 was a very challenging market for Canada with the TSX down -11.6% for the year. After years of underperformance and with attractive relative valuations, the TSX is overdue to outperform, however, as we highlighted last month, it is unlikely for Canadian markets to gain any real traction until financial stocks, commodities and the loonie show signs of strength and earnings stop declining. With crude prices once again weak in December, now down >40% from their highs only two months ago, and commodity indices at year lows, we do not appear to be there yet.

It was an historic month in terms of the extreme market moves, with U.S. indices posting their worst December since 1931 amidst the depression. At its nadir, the S&P 500 was down 14.8% for the month before partially rebounding. In a year that started off with an environment of low volatility, extreme bullishness, synchronized global growth and the strongest earnings gains in years, we ended the year with pretty much the opposite - a technically broken market, panicky behaviour, and extreme bearishness. Numerous markets around the world hit official “bear market” territory, down 20% or more from their respective highs, including the tech-heavy Nasdaq which posted a negative year after being up almost 20% as of October. There is a long list of “causes” for the sell-off, including a Fed tightening too far, a trade war that is starting to bite into earnings, decelerating global growth, and a number of more mechanical reasons including tax-loss selling and fund redemptions driven by some of the largest flows out of equity funds on record.

The key question looking forward is whether or not we are rolling into a recession. Bear markets that occur without a recession tend to average a 24% decline – not far from where we are today. Bear markets within a recession are much worse, falling 37% on average. The “soft” data, including PMIs, ISM, and sentiment indicators have fallen off a cliff in recent months, with the U.S. data catching up quickly to already weak global data. However the “hard” data including employment, industrial production, wage growth and housing starts remain supportive, showing deceleration, but nothing close to levels that typically lead recessions. Poor soft data can become self-fulfilling as a negative feedback loop takes hold; as an example there are signs that the riskiest parts credit market are freezing up with leveraged loans declining and junk debt deals getting shelved due to lack of demand. If we were forced to guess, we would favour a 2015/16 or 1998 scenario where growth slows but doesn’t turn negative, but markets will absolutely remain volatile as investors weigh future scenarios, and each data point will take on increased importance.

We enter 2019 positioned similarly to the last few months with the fund at the low end of targeted risk. Periods like these, where markets suffer a substantial pullback, remind us of the merits of our gearing-down process and has allowed each of our funds to outperform during this downdraft. The goal of our process is to protect capital by sitting on the sidelines until markets re-assert themselves, at which point we will re-engage. Whether the rally that took hold in the last week of the year was a short-term bounce in a bigger decline, or the start of a turn higher, we will have to wait and see, however, for the time being we remain cautious until tactical indicators turn up and a more constructive trend emerges.
