Commentary

The EHP Select Fund Class "F" units declined -0.7% for the month of March, versus a decline of -0.2% for the TSX Composite. Gains from shorts were more than offset by losses from our longs, particularly our holdings in reasonably priced industrials and material stocks (paper and forest). TSX leadership came from the defensive and bond proxy areas of the market as investors looked to de-risk portfolios. Current sentiment surrounding Canadian markets is horrendous, as evidenced by the TSX down ~6% for the year alongside weakness in the loonie, as NAFTA concerns, potential trade wars, slowing economic data, and housing concerns weigh on investors. It is hard to find a Canada bull despite the cheapest relative equity valuations to the U.S in a decade, positive earnings revisions and stronger than expected commodity prices. Without knowing when, one should anticipate outperformance at some point for no other reason than mean-reversion.

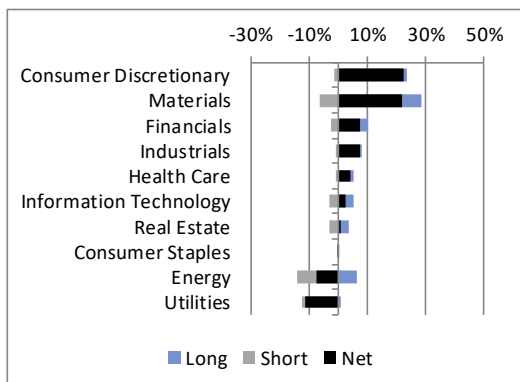

March was a challenging month for equity investors as not only did global markets trade down, but they did so in whipsaw fashion, with massive swings taking place and with leadership shifting across investment styles and between sectors. A whole new series of concerns emerged in March, taking markets lower from a mid-month bounce, with the current fears being protectionist rhetoric from Washington and the potential for ensuing trade wars. Tech stocks were also topical, with data-privacy questions, monopoly concerns and fear of regulatory scrutiny all suddenly headwinds for the sector. We have written extensively about the dangers of high-priced growth stocks in late cycle environments, and while the market-leading FAANG stocks hit all-time highs after the February sell-off, the last few weeks in March saw the first meaningful signs of cracks in the crowded bet. While likely too early to call an end to the "growth at any price" trade that has dominated market leadership for the majority of the last fifteen months, we are encouraged to see the early signs of a return to an environment where valuations may actually matter.

Fund flows are also becoming a troubling narrative, with some of the largest equity inflows on record coinciding with the market top in January, followed by the largest weekly outflows in history during the February sell-off, followed by huge inflows in March as investors bought the rally, only to have markets once again punish those same buyers on the renewed market sell-off. Is passive investing becoming active panic? This behavior can make it more difficult to find a market bottom as the twin mantras of "FOMO" (fear of missing out), and "buy the dips" dissipates and trapped short-term buyers look to sell rallies. In another sign of a worsening correction, for the first time in many months, low volatility strategies outperformed all others as investors rotated toward defensive bond proxy sectors and away from high-beta stocks.

We enter April with risk in the fund now fully geared down. With U.S markets capitulating in March and joining their global counterparts, the final shoe dropped in our de-risking process, leaving us with exposures and betas for each of our funds at the lower end of their targeted ranges. As a reminder, our gearing process is designed to allow us to participate in bull markets, but more importantly to protect investors during extended drawdowns. Whether this is one of those periods, only time will tell, but we will stick to our discipline which currently has us conservatively positioned and will remain so until those conditions change.
