Commentary

The EHP Advantage Fund Class “F” units declined -1.4% for the month of April, versus a gain of 1.8% for the TSX Composite and a loss of -0.2% for the S&P 500 in CAD$. North American markets continued to be choppy and trendless during the month, with key technical levels seemingly dictating the upper and lower boundaries for the indices. Strategy performance was mixed, with gains from longs overwhelmed by losses from shorts in both Canada and the U.S., and small losses in our Credit Momentum strategy. In terms of equity styles, momentum strategies performed poorly across the globe, while value strategies improved, but one consistent feature of the month was the persistent buying of higher beta, lower quality stocks that caused losses on the short side of the portfolio. Credit markets in particular are giving confusing signals, with high yield moving to a “risk on” condition in our models early in the month, pushing us out of our defensive US long bond position only weeks after entering it, and saving us from more meaningful losses as defensive treasuries had yet another leg down.

April saw most global developed market equity indices posting a positive month, continuing the rebound from the February correction with risk appetites slowly returning. Earnings season has seen corporate profits surpass already lofty expectations, while at the same time anxiety surrounding potentially disruptive political and trade issues have diminished. Investor sentiment continues to oscillate wildly with most recent data pointing to elevated bullishness after a period of extreme bearishness. As has been the case for the last few months, we appear to be in a period where rapid leadership reversals have become the norm with massive swings occurring almost daily across investment styles and between sectors. We are finally seeing evidence of the “growth at any price” style leadership giving way to improved performance from deep value stocks in cyclical areas of the market. However, this particular shift to value has been characterized by investors buying lower quality, higher beta stocks in a “dash for trash” marked by heavy short-covering, while still avoiding higher quality, lower volatility stocks. Yield stocks continue to be pressured as interest rates moved higher during April, and with the U.S. 10-year breaching the psychological 3% level, defensive sectors such as staples, pipelines and telecoms were underperformers.

While the market continues to frustrate on a day-to-day basis, looking through the noise, we are seeing some “green shoots” with high yield debt, often a leading indicator of equity risk appetite, resuming a tentative uptrend. Globally, we enter the month with International markets turning higher and hitting risk-on levels as well – with Europe UK, Japan and Australia all moving in sync. While the stronger USD (and weaker global currencies) plays an important part in this, we may well be led out of this global market correction by International markets that have cheaper valuations and with central banks that are much more accommodative. The persistent bid to lower quality, higher beta stocks in not an unusual characteristic of market leadership or style shifts, and we would expect that higher quality value stocks will follow if the rotation continues. We enter the month with our equity strategies defensively positioned, and the overall fund in the middle of our risk range. Only time will tell whether North American markets resume their uptrend, and we remain cognizant that all indications continue to point to a late-cycle market, but perhaps one that is not yet finished for this bull market. As always, despite having our views and opinions about where we think the market is likely to go, we rely on our rules based process to dictate positioning and market exposure and risk. our discipline which currently has us conservatively positioned and will remain so until those conditions change.
