Commentary

The EHP Guardian International Fund declined -0.2% for the month of August. EAFE markets were down -1.7% on the month, continuing their pattern of sideways, volatile action. Equity were pressured as dividend paying, lower volatility stocks moved lower, despite the overall market weakness. Credit strategies had small losses as high yield markets outside of the U.S. were pressured by equity market weakness.

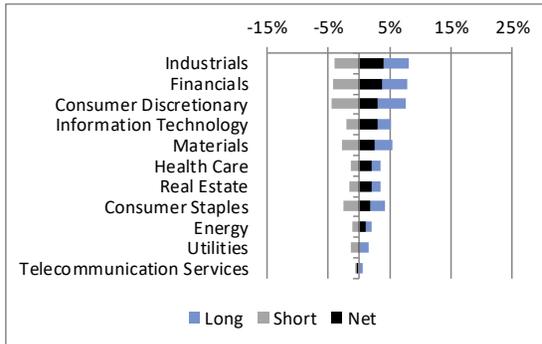

Globally, equity markets were mixed with strength in the U.S. and weakness in most other developed markets. Escalating trade tensions continue to pressure export-driven Canadian and European markets, while U.S. markets appear seemingly invincible despite growing trade concerns and the new threat of emerging market contagion. Trends remain elusive, with global equities, bonds and currencies continuing their choppy, sideways action, seemingly in a tug-of-war between strong U.S.-led earnings on one hand, and negative global macro headwinds on the other. Factors have been no less volatile, with a big rebound in momentum and growth stocks in August following a tough few months, while value and low volatility stocks resumed their underperformance. In an encouraging sign for the broader market, breadth widened out beyond tech and large caps, with small caps, defensives and industrial stocks outperforming, helping contribute to the market's move higher.

Despite lengthy underperformance and attractive relative multiples, value stocks continue to be weighed down as they remain a source of funds for investors chasing the hottest growth stories. There is no better example than the one in our own backyard where the cannabis stocks have again rocketed higher in recent weeks, fueled by M&A, and as a group defying any reasonable long term valuation paradigm. Investors seem increasingly willing to bet on the pure speculative momentum trade, presumably hoping to sell to the next buyer at a higher price. Trading volume typically accelerates with price momentum and these stocks haven't disappointed in that regard, with their entire market cap turning over every few weeks. Stock action like this is reminiscent of previous bubbles such as resource stocks in 2007 and tech stocks in 2000. Ultimately when the party ends, investors tend to move back to safe, stable and reasonably priced stocks while those left "holding the bag" will nurse losses in individual growth stocks that may never be recovered. Our job in the interim is to maintain a disciplined approach in spite of the hype, and stick to what works over the long run.

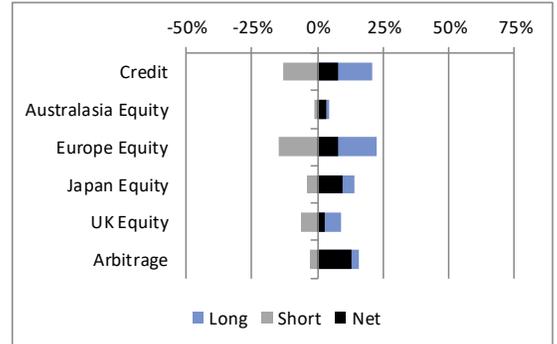

Our International tactical indicators are mixed, with Europe and the U.K. in a downtrend, and Japan and Australia showing strength. We enter September at the mid-range of our risk levels. With the exception of U.S. market, which is trading well above "risk off" levels, most other global indices remain uncomfortably close to the levels that would have us reducing risk – a condition that has persisted for most of the year. We don't expect to see that change until there is some resolution on the geopolitical/trade front, with markets remaining range-bound, volatile, and unlikely to break out one way or the other. As always, we stay the course on our process, ready to adapt as the facts change.
