Commentary

The EHP Select Fund Class "F" units increased +1.0% for the month of November. Returns came from the short side of the portfolio as lower quality, over-levered stocks sold off. Investors continued to de-risk portfolios with an ongoing flight to quality into defensive and dividend-paying sectors: telecom, staples and utilities, while energy and cannabis continued to decline. It has been a challenging year for the Canadian market as a combination of weaker than expected commodity prices, disappointing earnings and continued negative revisions have all weighed on the index. Despite attractive overall valuations, it is hard to envision the TSX exhibiting any outperformance vis-a-vis other global markets until the sentiment around the commodity complex improves.

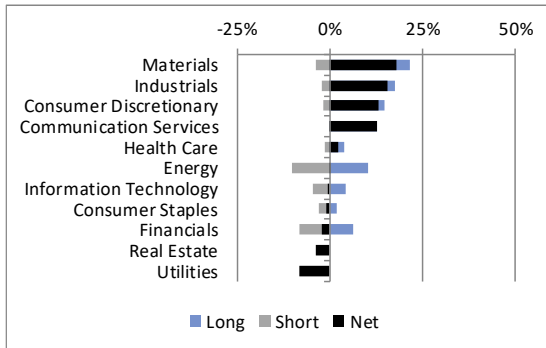

November was shaping up to be another challenging month for global equities with most markets re-testing their lows for the year, however comments from a seemingly more dovish Fed along with optimism on the trade front ignited a strong rally into month-end, pushing most indices into the green. As has been the case since the summer, leadership came from more defensive, dividend-paying stocks as investors further abandoned momentum stocks, best personified by the weakness in "FAANG" (and other overly expensive mega-cap stocks). This factor rotation has been global in nature, and most extreme in the U.S given growth stocks had been bid up to extreme valuations for the better part of the last two years, and therefore the most vulnerable. Whether this recent relative outperformance by value stocks has further legs, we will need to wait and see, however, after having lagged most other active approaches for an extended period, it is definitely long overdue for its time to shine. As managers that employ valuation as a core attribute for our holdings, we are encouraged by the return to an environment where investors once again recognize that what one pays for a stock matters - the type of backdrop that our funds are designed to do particularly well in.

It's clear that the pace of global growth has slowed, highlighted by German and Japanese GDP posting negative Q3 numbers quarter over quarter, and with PMIs globally showing weakness. The big question is whether this is a growth "pause" made worse by the tariff trade-war that could quickly reverse itself, or whether it is the start of a more meaningful slowdown that ultimately leads to a recession. A strong US Dollar has hurt global equity markets and EM in particular, and rising rates have seen bonds sell off alongside stocks, making it a difficult market to navigate. While easy to jump on this downdraft, we need to remain cognizant that all is not dire and there are reasons to be optimistic, including; a more accommodating Fed, equity valuations which are back to their lowest levels since early '16, and no obvious signs of a recession in the near term in the U.S. despite the slower pace of growth.

We exit the month positioned much as we began, with risk in the fund at the lower end of its targeted range. While recognizing that December has historically been one of the strongest months of the year for equities, we need to first get through the headwinds of tax loss selling, window dressing and likely repositioning for 2019. For now, rallies remain suspect as they have tended to be low quality and we've yet to see real buyers return to equities. Whether we remain defensively positioned will depend on where markets go from here, and as always, we respect our process and don't attempt to call market tops or bottoms.
